covered with beads worked on fine silk, which is commended in fall skirts, the rather low flaring drapery giving a graceful hip line. For this skirt, which measures at the bottom three yards, five and a half yards of satin, thirty-six inches, will be required.

The skirt is, of course, unlined. Lightness of weight is a characteristic of all present-day apparel.

The bodice is of plain and embroidered net. The sleeves, as will be noted, are of embroidered net with elbow puff of plain net, and the high-back collar higher than the same stripes.

Covered with beads worked on fine silk, beads in such an array of iridescent and dainty colors that the bags, when fine shed, look like no more than a handful of bright shades of chiffon laid one against the other. Still others are of heavy silk, with beaded fringe and a design in beads worked conventionally or in haphazard fashion on the sides.

A very attractive new bag is made of Roman striped ribbon in vivid colors. It is finished at the bottom with a heavy beaded tassel, and the draw-strings are of narrow ribbon in one of the darker shades of the stripes. This bag is effective with a white summer frock, worn with a hat banded with the same stripes.

Bags are often made of the material of the frock with which they are worn, and the lining is of a contrasting color. These bags/are attractive when made in three sections, forming a three-sided bag, ending in a long, three-sided point. The point can be edged with narrow steel-bead fringe or it can be ended in a button or tassel. Striped linings are also effective for these bags.

Velvet bags embroidered with bead designs, and ending in a button-like lassel of velvet, with sometimes bead pendants, are effective with autumn frocks and velvet hats. The bag may weil be made the color of the hat. The weil be made the color of the nat. The lining might be the color of the frock. A blue serge frock, with a little embroidery in yellow and purple, with a purple velvet hat and a purple velvet bag, lined with blue and yellow stripes, would be an exceedingly smart combination.

Special Correspondence of The Star.

NEW YORK, August 26.—Since the fashion first began for velvet jackets in addition to white skirts, and after the first gasp of surprise over the eccentricity of such a hot fashion in a humid summer, women have ceased to wonder or to cavil at it. They have accepted it.

There are many queer fashions this season, and it would take a historian to classify them. We are like small children learning to walk without a guiding dren learning to walk without a guiding dren learning to walk without a guiding advice, call on us."

Among the fashions which were instituted in Paris for the American trade was the black velvet jacket with the white skirt, and the American women have turned and twisted it into whatever shape they desired.

From present indications it would seem that the velvet jacket in any form might be a rival to the colored sweater, when the season advances. We are not tired of the gaudy, knitted jacket that has ruled the continent for two years and which has turned our summers into tropical jungles of blazing colors, but, being human, we want more kinds of jackets than one, and the idea of black or dark blue velvet rather pleases our fancy. "Here are the clothes; if you need our of the materials used for children Navy blue, dark brown and hunter's green are the leading colors, livened up with trimmings in Roman stripes bright plaids and checks or of plain silk in bright colors, such as red, empire green, blue and gold.

We have long since passed the day when any one with the slightest pretense to fashion considered it permissible to wear a white shirt waist with a dark skirt out of the house.

The skirts that are worn with the new kind of velvet jacket, which is a substitute for a sweater, are of white satin. Sometimes the deep hems are corded at the top or finished with a form of stitching that is imitation of guilting. Did Peter Takes Jimmy Skunk's Advice.
